Webinar: Mediating Construction Disputes – a Way to Avoid Arbitration and Litigation

Arbitration and litigation are very lengthy and expensive. Mediation is a good alternative form of dispute resolution in which the parties involved structure and control the process and the outcome. This webinar focuses on how to prepare for and achieve an acceptable resolution of construction disputes.

Mediation is not new. It was employed in ancient India and the Islamic world. In more recent times, mediation has been widely adopted in the U.S. construction industry as a form of Alternative Dispute Resolution (ADR).

Mediation is often employed, in lieu of arbitration or litigation, when negotiations have failed to resolve claims. We will outline the mediation process and discuss why construction professionals need to learn about mediation. We will also analyze the good and bad aspects of mediation. Finally, we will offer several practical suggestions on how to prepare for, and be successful in, mediation.

Participants will learn:

- the role of mediator in the process
- why mediation so often leads to settlement, though previous negotiations failed
- how mediation compares to other forms of ADR
- how to effectively prepare for mediation
- how to effectively participate in mediation
- what to do after mediation agreement is attained

Webinar Outline:

- Introduction to mediation
- Role of the mediator
- Reasons for mediation success
- Mediation vs. other forms of ADR
- Mediation Process
- Strong & weak points of mediation
- How to “succeed” at mediation.
 - ◊ General points
 - ◊ Preparation for mediation
 - ◊ At Mediation
 - ◊ After mediation
- Conclusion / Q & A
